LAUGHING LADIES

By Hal E. Roach.

A struggling dentist, not rushed with business, is visited by a wealthy patient, who, frantic with pain is given an over-dose of laughing gas. Practically floated out of the chair, the patient is wafted into a series of humorous situations, while being frantically pursued by the dentist who is endeavoring to apply a restorative. But all chases must end - and when the flying female is finally covered and sprayed with the liquid which restores her senses, a wake of laughs and smiles is left behind,
